The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Sent for list of testimonials. Address P. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by all Druggists, etc. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

A Coral Sleeve Button

By ALLAN G. LAMOND

A murder was committed in Naples, Italy. Signor Lancani, a single gentleman living in apartments, was the victim, and since he was well off and fond of display he had considerable jewelry—for a man—which was taken. The police learned of the missing articles so far as they could be determined and gave a description of them to Giuseppe Varilli, a member of the carabinieri, or national police, who was given the case to make out of it what he could. There was missing one gold chronometer watch, two gold chains, a number of shirt studs and other articles of similar character. The assassin and robber in making his exit had dropped a link sleeve button on the floor. They make in Italy of pink coral exquisite adornments, and this single sleeve button was twin roses of the most delicate carving, set in gold.

Varilli looked at it admiringly. "Whoever has the mate to it," he said, "will scarcely be able to refrain from wearing it, so beautiful is it. If he had it as well as its mate, he will surely betray himself on account of it." However, the officer put it in his vest pocket with the vague expectation that it might lead to a clue.

The murder had been committed at an hour when a number of persons were about, but no one could be found who would admit that he had seen any one in the building who did not belong there at the time of the assassination. Varilli, who knew the criminal side of Naples well, assumed that this reluctance indicated that the murderer was a member of the dreaded Camorra, and if any one dared to peep upon him he would do so at the risk of his life.

A year passed without the slightest clue to the Lancani murder. Several of the missing articles of jewelry turned up, but were always found on persons above suspicion. They were ready to tell where they got them, but either the person from whom they were obtained or the next possessor beyond could not remember just how the jewel had come to him. But the sleeve button was never regained. "It is too beautiful," said Varilli. "The rascal will not part with it. He will not wear it in his cuff, for he has no mate for it. He will not get a mate made, for he can only secure one from a skilled carver, such as made the one he has. Were I in his place I would have it made into two studs. I would not turn it into a scarfpin, for one rose would do for that, and I could not use the other rose. Yes, that is the only thing to do with it, and if the assassin wears it he will do so as a couple of shirt studs. He will wear a necktie and not a scarf, because the scarf would hide it. My theory rests on the idea that his vanity will get the better of his caution."

One day Varilli's chief started him to London, where news had been received that a certain bandit, who had murdered a traveler on the road between Sorrento and Anagni who could not or would not furnish a ransom, was living apparently in a well to do condition. On his arrival in London Varilli sought the Italian quarter, but his quarry, passing under the name of Scalpo, was not to be found there. Varilli spent a couple of months at the English capital and was about to give up his quest and return to Naples when one evening he entered a music hall and, taking a seat at a table, called for the English drink, ale, and a cigar. Unlike nearly all Italians the detective had light hair and eyes. Moreover, though he spoke English indifferently, he had learned to speak it without the Italian pronunciation. Indeed, a stranger would have taken him rather for a German than an Italian. Noticing a man at the next table to him sitting alone, he got up and took a seat opposite the other. The man looked at him with a pair of suspicious eyes from under the rim of his hat, evidently not relishing his movement. "Don't disturb yourself," said Varilli. "I think I have seen you in Berlin. Are you not Herr Berhoff, a brewer?" "I have never been in Berlin in my life," said the other, showing by his speech that he was an Italian, "and I am not a brewer."

"Then I have been mistaken," said Varilli, who had desired to get closer to the man and hear him speak. "Now that I see those beautiful coral studs you wear I take it you are from Italy. I have never seen such carving as that except in Naples."

At this the man changed countenance, involuntarily drawing his coat over his shirt front. Then he glanced about him as if looking for an exit. "I am from Naples myself," Varilli went on saying. "I know exactly where those studs came from. There is a shop in Naples facing the bay where they are sold. I have a pair of roses composing a link sleeve button."

The man glared and, rising, stood at bay. Varilli put his hand in his vest pocket, took out the sleeve button and held it up before the other.

"In a public music hall," he continued. "In the center of London it will be impossible for you to escape. At the slightest commotion policemen will come. If you will go quietly with me there need be no disturbance."

A week from that evening Varilli delivered his prisoner, who turned out to be both the bandit he was after and the murderer of Lancani, to the authorities at Naples. He was condemned to that which is worse than death—solitary confinement for life.
